All 50 states closed schools to in-person instruction at some point during the 2019-2020 academic year. In forty-eight states, officials closed schools to in-person instruction for the remainder of the academic year after the coronavirus outbreak. Officials in Montana and Wyoming closed schools to in-person instruction but allowed them to reopen later in the school year.

This page covers the changes made during the 2020-2021 academic year as a result of the coronavirus pandemic. These changes included reopenings, closures, and the use of hybrid learning schedules.

Status of school reopenings, closures, and responses

Ballotpedia considered schools to be fully open if they used a traditional, in-person learning schedule where all students had the option to attend classes five days per week. Schools that were partially open offered some in-person classes but did not offer daily in-person classes for all students or grades. Schools were closed if they only offered virtual instruction.

Ballotpedia tracked state-level orders related to school openings and closures, but most states left reopening decisions to local health officials, schools, school boards, and districts. Click here to see Burbio's 50-state map tracking the percentage of in-person instruction at the county level.

The statewide statuses in the map below are categorized in the following manner:

- State-ordered partial closure - A state had regional school closures, required certain grade levels to close, or allowed hybrid instruction only.
- Varies by school/district - Districts, individual schools, or other local authorities could choose to reopen schools based on state-provided guidance.
- State-ordered in-person instruction for some grades - Schools statewide were required to offer in-person instruction (either full- or part-time) to students in certain grades.

- State-ordered in-person instruction - Schools statewide were required to open (either full- or part-time) to in-person instruction.

As of July 8, 2021, the status of school closures and reopenings was as follows:

- Two states (Delaware, Hawaii) and Washington, D.C. had state-ordered regional school closures, required closures for certain grade levels, or allowed hybrid instruction only.
 - 2019-20 enrollment: 410,896 students (0.81% of students nationwide)
- Thirteen states had state-ordered in-person instruction.
 - 2019-20 enrollment: 15,697,460 students (30.96% of students nationwide)
- One state (Arizona) had state-ordered in-person instruction for certain grades.
 - 2019-20 enrollment: 1,152,586 students (2.27% of students nationwide)
- Thirty-four states left decisions to schools or districts.
 - 2019-20 enrollment: 33,449,499 students (65.96% of students nationwide)

School openings and closures for the 2020-2021 school year

State	Status	Details
Alabama	No order in effect	Districts will make the decision on whether to open school buildings. The state board of education encourages that all schools provide, at a minimum, access to both traditional and remote learning throughout the 2020-21 school year.
Alaska	No order in effect	Each school district will decide when and if to reopen buildings. The state departments of education and health created a framework and guidance to help districts as they decide how to provide instruction.
Arizona	Some grades ordered open	All schools must have reopened for in-person learning by March 15, or following their spring break, according to an executive order by Gov. Doug Ducey. Middle and high schools in areas with high transmission, as defined by the Centers for Disease Control, are exempted from the order. Families can opt to continue with virtual schooling.
Arkansas	Ordered open	Education Secretary Johnny Key issued guidance Aug. 5 that requires districts to offer in-person instruction five days a week when classes resume. Districts were required to open their schools as soon as Aug. 24 and as late as Aug. 26. Decisions on whether to close a school are being made in collaboration with the Arkansas departments of health and education.
California	No order in effect	School districts may reopen schools at all grade levels as long as their COVID-19 new-case rate is 25 per 100,000 people or lower. California is moving toward a full reopening of its economy on June 15, and Gov. Newsom has said he "expects" all schools to be open for full-time in-person instruction then.

School reopening plans in the 2020-2021 school year

The following sections contain links to initial school operating plan summaries for the 2020-2021 academic year and a timeline of state responses to the pandemic.

[\[8\]](#)
- Sept. 10, 2020: At the beginning of the school year, Burbio reported a majority of schools were using virtual or hybrid learning in Alabama. [\[9\]](#)[\[10\]](#)
- August 3, 2020: The Alabama Department of Public Health released an 85-page school reopening toolkit. It contained recommendations and guidelines for school districts to incorporate into their reopening plans. [\[11\]](#)
- July 29, 2020: Gov. Kay Ivey (R) extended her Safer At Home Order through August 31. She modified the order's existing mask mandate to extend to students at schools (second grade and older) and colleges. [\[12\]](#)
- June 26, 2020: Superintendent Eric Mackey released reopening guidance for schools. Mackey said that the 50-page document was not a mandate but that it should be used by school districts to craft their individual reopening plans. [\[13\]](#)
- May 21, 2020: Ivey announced that schools could reopen beginning June 1 if they followed social distancing and sanitation guidelines. [\[14\]](#)

Schools in Arizona were closed to in-person instruction on March 15, 2020, and remained closed for the remainder of the 2019-2020 academic year. The state allowed schools to start reopening on August 17, 2020. The timeline below lists statewide responses we tracked.

- June 29, 2021: At the end of the school year, Burbio reported most schools were in-person in Arizona . [\[20\]](#) [\[21\]](#)
- March 15, 2021: Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey's (R) executive order requiring public schools to offer in-person instruction took effect March 15. High schools and middle schools in high-transmission counties were exempt from the order. Parents could still keep their children in virtual classes. [\[22\]](#)
- March 3, 2021: Gov. Doug Ducey (R) issued an executive order requiring public schools to offer in-person instruction by March 15. High schools and middle schools in high transmission counties were exempt from the order. Parents could still keep their children in virtual classes. [\[23\]](#)
- Sept. 10, 2020: At the beginning of the school year, Burbio reported most schools were using virtual or hybrid learning in Arizona. [\[24\]](#)[\[25\]](#)
- August 17, 2020: Schools in Arizona were officially allowed to reopen to in-person instruction if they met metrics the state Department of Health released the week of Aug. 3. For a district to reopen, its county needed to have a two-week drop in the number of COVID-19 cases, a two-week period where the percent of positive cases was below 7%, and less than 10% of hospital visits were COVID-19 related. Some school districts that did not meet these criteria also reopened to in-person instruction. Gov. Doug Ducey (R) said he supported those districts in their decision and that superintendents and principals could have the final say. [\[26\]](#)
- July 23, 2020: Ducey ordered public schools to reopen for on-site learning on August 17 for students who had nowhere else to go. Superintendent Kathy Hoffman clarified that the order meant each school district needed to open at least one site for students to go, but did not have to open every school or require every teacher to work in-person. [\[27\]](#)
- June 29, 2020: Ducey ordered public schools to delay the start of the school year until at least August 17. [\[28\]](#)
- June 1, 2020: The Arizona Department of Education released guidance for reopening schools for the 2020-2021 school year. The guidance included screening students before entry, face covering requirements, smaller class sizes, and the elimination of communal dining halls. [\[29\]](#)
- May 29, 2020: Ducey announced that schools would reopen in the fall and that the state would release guidelines to schools on June 1. [\[30\]](#)

Arkansas

- August 24, 2020: Schools in Arkansas reopened to in-person instruction. [\[35\]](#) The Arkansas Center for Health Improvement announced that district-level data on testing rates and active coronavirus cases would be made available online. [\[36\]](#)

- August 13, 2020: Gov. Asa Hutchinson (R) released the Arkansas Ready to Learn Healthy School Guide. The document was a support guide for teachers and administrators created in partnership with Arkansas Children's Hospital and the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences. The guide outlined best practices for in-person learning. [\[37\]](#)
- August 4, 2020: Hutchinson said that public schools in the state were still on track to reopen beginning Aug. 24. "We need to have school this year. Absolutely. I'm firm on that. The educators are firm on that. Public health is firm on [that]. We need to have school," he said. [\[38\]](#)
- July 9, 2020: Hutchinson announced that the reopening of schools would be delayed until August 24. Schools in the state were previously set to open on August 13. [\[39\]](#)
- June 24, 2020: Arkansas Department of Education Commissioner Johnny Key released updated guidance for schools. The new guidance recommended that students older than 10 wear face coverings while riding on the bus and that younger students wear face coverings whenever practical. [\[40\]](#)
- June 10, 2020: Hutchinson said that he expected schools would re-open for in-person instruction in the fall. [\[41\]](#)
- June 5, 2020: The Arkansas Department of Education released its 26-page Arkansas Ready for Learning plan. The plan required face coverings for staff and students older than 10, social distancing requirements, and staggered meal times to limit cafeteria capacity. [\[42\]](#)

California

 - March 1, 2021:

- Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear's (D) executive order recommending all school districts and private schools offer some form of in-person instruction became effective. [\[133\]](#)
- Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) encouraged schools in counties across the state to return students to the classroom. In January, Hogan said school districts that didn't offer some in-person instruction could face legal action. Districts were allowed to decide how many days a week to offer in-person instruction. Students could still opt for virtual schooling. [\[156\]](#)
- The North Carolina State Senate failed to override Gov. Roy Cooper's (D) veto of SB 37, a bill that would have required schools to provide daily in-person instruction. The final vote was 29-20, one vote short of the three-fifths majority necessary to override a gubernatorial veto. One Democrat joined with Republicans in voting to override the veto. The Senate passed the bill 31-16 on Feb. 16. Cooper vetoed it on Feb. 26. [\[253\]](#)

- February 2021 \(click to expand\)

- February 26, 2021: North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper (D) vetoed a bill that would have required schools to provide daily in-person instruction. The state House of Representatives passed the bill 77-42 on Feb. 22, while the state Senate passed the bill 31-16 on Feb. 16. To override Cooper's veto, the bill would need the support of three-fifths of the members in both chambers of the legislature. [\[253\]](#)
- February 23, 2021: Gov. Andy Beshear (D) issued an executive order recommending all school districts and private schools offer some form of in-person instruction by March 1. The Kentucky Department of Education released KDE COVID-19 Guidance 2.0 to guide school reopenings. [\[134\]](#)

Gov. Tim Walz (D) said he expected schools to offer some in-person instruction by March 8. Under the plan, families could still opt to keep their children home for remote instruction. [\[183\]](#)
- February 19, 2021: New Hampshire Gov. Chris Sununu (R) signed an executive order requiring schools to provide at least two days of classroom instruction per week starting March 8. [\[221\]](#)
- February 17, 2021: Gov. Tim Walz (D) released a plan to return students to in-person instruction. On Feb. 22, all middle and high school students were scheduled to return to the classroom for either full-time instruction or a hybrid approach. Walz said he expected all schools to offer some in-person learning by March 8. Under the plan, families could still opt to keep their children home for remote instruction. [\[183\]](#)
- February 15, 2021: Iowa schools were required to offer full-time in-person instruction. Legislation Gov. Kim Reynolds (R) signed on Jan. 29 required schools to open but also allowed parents to request a hybrid or all remote option for their children. Additionally, schools could request a waiver from the requirement to provide in-person instruction from the state Department of Education based on factors such as the number of teachers quarantining because of the virus. The bill passed the state House and Senate with the support of all Republicans and one Democrat. [\[112\]](#)
- February 11, 2021: [\[254\]](#)
 - The North Carolina House of Representatives voted 77-44 on Feb. 11 to advance a bill requiring school districts to provide the option of in-person instruction for all students. Families would be able to choose remote instruction. All Republicans and five Democrats in the chamber supported the bill.
 - The state Senate passed a similar bill 29-15 on Feb. 9, but the chamber refrained from holding a final vote on the state House's version of the bill. The state House bill contained modifications distinguishing it from the state Senate bill, including a provision allowing special accommodations for educators who had conditions that increased their risk of severe illness from COVID-19. No Republicans opposed the state Senate bill, and two Democrats voted in favor of it.

- February 2, 2021: Gov. Roy Cooper (D) announced new school guidance and encouraged public K-12 schools to reopen for full-time in-person instruction. The guidance instructed elementary schools to reopen under Plan A, which did not require social distancing. Middle and high schools were slated to reopen under Plan B, which did require social distancing. Cooper said he wanted to leave the final reopening decisions to school districts. The state still required districts to provide a remote learning option for families that chose to opt in. [\[255\]](#)
- January 2021 \(click to expand\)
 - January 29, 2021: Gov. Kim Reynolds (R) signed a bill requiring school districts to provide students in-person instruction five days a week. Under the law, parents could still request a hybrid or all remote option for their children, and schools could request a waiver from the Department of Education based on factors such as the number of teachers quarantining because of the virus. The bill, which passed the state House and Senate with the support of all Republicans and one Democrat, set a Feb. 15 deadline for schools to offer full-time in-person instruction. [\[113\]](#)
 - January 19, 2021: All public and private pre-K, elementary, and middle schools in West Virginia were required to resume full-time in-person or hybrid (at least two in-person days every week) instruction, regardless of their county's transmission rates.
