The current state of reopening in Boston includes restrictions announced by both the City and State in mid-December and can be found on our reopening website \(https://www.boston.gov/health-and-human-services/covid-19-reopening-city-boston\).

"We are in one of the most serious points of the COVID-19 pandemic so far. Our case numbers are concerning and our hospital numbers continue to be higher than we'd like," said Mayor Walsh. "Consistent with our cautious approach since the beginning of this crisis, we are extending this pause in reopening for at least another three weeks. This is not about targeting specific sectors as the cause of viral spread, but an effort to reduce overall activity happening outside people's homes. I urge everyone to do their part so that we can slow the spread of COVID-19 and eventually lift these restrictions."
